[All Rights Reserved,1 LONDON, . une 12, 1886. Now that the Irish home rule bill is coac and puried, for some time at all events, and a not be a together uninteresting to yenture a few speculations as to the future. At the ast elections the rish, knowing that the libera s would obtain a good majority over the conservatives, voted at the bigging of Mr. Parnell for the conservatives, when no nationalist was at hand, in order to reduce the the balance of power in the hands of Mr. 'arnel . The "uncrowned king of reland" by one of the two great parties would place the other in a minority. Incer the circumstances there was nothing for Mr. Glad-tone to do but arne, and be able to earry the government. Now, what will the Irish do at the next election? Of course gratitude should dictate to Glacstonian shace. Only one thing is to be feared. If, by so doing in London, Liverpoo, G asgow and in other single cities, where the is not impossible that the next liberal governthe he p of the Irish vote, there is no nece for

Gladstone to enforce with the apparan; mandate of the country a measure which in reality is opposed by the country. But how are the conservatives to necke what kind of home rule sha, be granted to the lrish? On the other hand, if the next ibera. majority were partly composed of whigs and racicals, that is to say of followers of _.orc. Lartington and Mr. Chamberlain, this majority would not be a working one. No. 1 repeat it, book whichever was you like, you cannot see how any speculation can afford at the present time any hope of a percetul solus tion of the trish question.

What is amusing, is to see the clever name assumed by the conservatives to go before the constituencies. Cornerly they were "Fair Tracers," now they are "Unionists." "hese, men, who are ready to recommend a policy or twenty years' coercion in Ireland and thus alienate forever the friendly feelings of the _rish, call themselves "unionists," and, using the "merest's and of vu gar controversy" call "separatists," the men who are willing to divice parliament in order to unite the two nations.
